

·Madison's mystery·

Katie and William arrived at the Winnipeg Reservoir parking lot, where the group of hikers with whom they will make the overnight hike to the San Roque Monastery are staying. They were excited about sleeping on the mountain and discovering the secrets that await within the monastery walls, voices, whispers and the presence of souls caught between two worlds. The route was simple and they would arrive at the monastery at nightfall to have dinner and prepare the rituals to convoke the souls. Nothing made them suspicious of what they were about to live. The group walked at a good speed as they talked to each other, knowing more of each other. A strong gust of air began to blow, making it difficult for them to walk at the speed they were walking at. The guide indicated to the group that they had to speed up their walk because his watch indicated that a storm was coming. The moon was losing light as it began to rain heavily and a huge thunderclap broke the silence of the forest. Lightning, thunder, and a heavy storm caused the group to get separated little by little. Katie and William were having difficulty following, and everything was complicated when Katie stepped on a trap that caught her foot, seriously injuring her. William knew immediately that it was serious, but his screams were drowned out by the thunder.

They were both left alone, unable to call for help, they did not know of the way to the Sanctuary, they had to find a place to take cover from the heavy storm. William was pulling Katie at the limit of his strength, the accident with the trap had made them lose sight of their group. Both were lost in the middle of the forest, the storm was raging and William felt that at any moment he could collapse, when in the distance he thought he saw a wall. He walked with his last strength and before them they found a mansion, its abandoned garden made them suspect that it was abandoned. They had no idea what they were about to experience. There still breathes a soul of a woman who went crazy after her son's suicide. When William came in with Katie he took her into a room while he searched the kitchen so he could get water, a cloth and soap. He had the feeling that someone was looking at him fixedly. He looked around but the house remained silence. Suddenly, the sound of a door slamming put William on alert. He called out for Katie without getting an answer. Quickly, he made his way to Katie's room. From the corridor, he saw the closed door and ran to the door. William was pounding hard on the door, unable to open it but Katie didn't answer. While William was in the kitchen, a woman's spirit, Madison, took Katie by the arms and pulled her across the room, spinning her around and throwing her into some furniture. William kicked the door open. When he entered, he saw that Katie was possessed, that she was not herself. When Madison saw William she moved towards him and amputated his hands and feet. The whole room was full of blood. When she killed William, Madison took Katie and tied her on the bed, so that she could not escape. On the woman's face could see all the evil she had, her face was full of blood splatters and her cold breath ran all over Katie's body. She grabbed William's parts and headed for the basement. Meanwhile, Katie was still there, in that dark room, unable to escape.
