

THE BACKROOMS

One Saturday night, Jake and Joe decided to go to the funniest party ever. They picked up the car and went to their friend's house. The music was quite good and the house was filled with laughs and flashing lights. They had fun dancing and laughing, vibing the party. When they had to go home, they were so drunk, but nobody cared. On the way, a truck light focused badly on Joe and the car fell down the mountain.

When they woke up, on the left there was a yellow wall, some lights and insignificant doors, when they looked right, a smiling face was looking Joe very close. Nobody was there. Immediately he looked up for Jake, he was on the floor with his arms twisted. But he wasn't Jake, it was a doppelgänger. He immediately went to look for his friend. As they walked through deserted rooms, they noticed some shadows moving in the corners and distant whispers. Suddenly, a perturbing character appeared, known as the doorman. He had long arms and legs, he didn't have a face and he was all black. Then, Jake appeared from the back and Joe confirmed he was the real. He explained all to his friend and they looked for a safe place. They tried to find an exit, but each door led them to a darker and more sinister corner of the backrooms. The creatures appeared from the darkness, and the backrooms every time went scarier. They found a door, and when they got inside, the doorman was there, the scene became blurry and distorted, it came all black.

They woke up at the party again, but this time something was different. The music sounded strange, the lights flashed bad and his friend wasn't there, there were doppelgängers of Jake and Joe all around. Joe met a person who wasn't any of them, but he hadn't any sense of who he was. He asked him for help but he disappeared at the second. The atmosphere became more and more tense, and the rooms became unrecognizable, like puppets in a nightmare. Their faces were distorted, and the laughter of the party became an insupportable echo.

Finally, the doorman reached them and they turned back to the level 2 of the backrooms. The story became an endless cycle of terror, where the line between dream and reality was blurred. Joe and Jake were trapped in an eternal nightmare, facing horrifying creatures and their own fear every time they returned to the party, a party that was no longer the same as they remembered.